Career advancement for law graduates

---

Law students and professionals study our programme to gain expertise in a specialised field of law, such as commercial law, banking law, arbitration, common law or shipping law. Law firms tend to prefer job candidates with an LLM from a good university because it indicates that they have acquired advanced, specialist legal training and are qualified to work in a multinational legal environment.

Career advancement for non-law graduates

Non-law graduates or experienced professionals pursue an LLM to gain expertise in areas of the law that regulate their current or prospective

Flexibility

There are many ways to study law at York. You can choose to study law as a full-time undergraduate student, or as a part-time student. You can also choose to study law as a postgraduate student. The Law Society of Ontario (LSO) offers a variety of flexible admission options for students who do not have a law degree. This includes the Law Society's Law Practice Program (LPP) and the Law Society's Law Practice Program (LPP) for students who do not have a law degree. The LPP is a two-year program that allows students to earn their law degree while working in a law firm. The LPP for students who do not have a law degree is a one-year program that allows students to earn their law degree while working in a law firm.

Flexible admissions

You can apply to join at any time of year and start whenever you receive your study materials.

Do I need a degree?

---

You do not need a law degree to apply: students with a good non-law

Sayaka Maeda

Current student, Japan

'I work in international development, and I found it very interesting and rewarding to understand human rights and other social issues from a legal perspective; this has allowed me to think and understand the issues from a more holistic viewpoint. The ability to choose from varied and extensive modules appealed to me. I would recommend this programme to prospective students who are curious to broaden their academic horizons.'
